Drought has risen to the forefront of California's environmental concerns as water agencies received additional directives to cut statewide consumption by another 25%, and impose more severe restrictions on landscape watering as of July 1, 2015.

CONSERVE & PRESERVE

Counter the threat to your landscape investment by using mulch.

Layer soiled areas around plants and drains with a simple organic product made from shredded bark, trees, plants and composts. This mulch slowly decomposes into the soil as years pass, creating a suitable environment for plants and trees to flourish without large amounts of water.

Working with MulchMaster to integrate certified and tested clean organic mulch into your landscape could be a key component of your strategy to conserve water and avoid surcharges and fines.

Save Water and More

Constructing and testing mulch studies and its relation to water conservation and control by universities proved that mulching systems are sufficient in retaining and saving water. Applying mulch can help attain overall water usage reductions of 20-30% on average in Southern California.

These independent studies suggest that using high quality mulch products can:

- ◆ Save up to 45% of the water used on landscapes
- ◆ Reduce landscape water evaporation by up to 70%
- ◆ Kill and prevent unwanted weeds without herbicides
- ◆ Insulate the soil keeping plants warmer in winters and cooler in summers
- ◆ Reduce soil erosion by cushioning the impact of heavy rainfall
